

However you choose to travel the backcountry, a well-rounded trail ethic includes these three realms:

Caution

- Wear protective gear.
- Ride in control of your vehicle.
- Bring map, raincoat and snacks.

Consideration

- Slow down upon encounters.
- Minimize noise and dust.
- Yield to wildlife and livestock.

Conservation

- Stay precisely on the trail.
- Choose trails for your use-type.
- Do not litter, and collect trash.

Respecting yourself, others, and the land can foster a sense of stewardship.

Keeping trails legally accessible and environmentally sustainable requires all tools in the chest known as land management. Through assisting land managers, we're just the tools to do it!

Ride with Respect maintains trails, educates visitors, and advocates for diverse recreation opportunities. Beginning with Sovereign Trail in 2002, we have demonstrated that proactive work on the ground can be a win-win situation for people and the environment.

RwR utilizes grants, which require matching donations and can only cover certain expenses. Thus we depend on individual contributions of time and money. What good is a fancy bike without a good trail to ride it on? Support your sport by finding responsible recreation groups locally and nationally.

If you love Moab, join RwR! As a deductible. Instead of monetary dues, at $5/hr including travel from Moab). 501(c)(3) organization, contributions are tax-deductible. RwR also accepts supervised volunteering (valued at $5/hr including travel from Moab). Of course, we prefer that you give in both forms! For a schedule, or to contact us about other dates, check out RideWithRespect.org. Members receive event invites, land-use updates, and good karma for being part of the solution.
